

Plots and Prospects: The English Country House in Literature and on Screen

Overview:

Country houses have long offered evocative settings for English storytelling. Whether as idyllic retreats or sites of social division, they have staged competing visions of ‘Englishness’ from the seventeenth century to the present. This course traces the country house through the literary imagination and onto the screen, following three distinct phases. First, we consider its role in the rise of the novel, reading extracts from Samuel Richardson, Henry Fielding, Jane Austen, and William Makepeace Thackeray to see how houses and estates lent form to narratives and definition to characters. Next, we turn to modern fiction, exploring the house as a site of social tensions in the work of E. M. Forster, Virginia Woolf, and Kazuo Ishiguro. Finally, we examine the country house on screen, from the nostalgia of Downton Abbey and Grantchester to its more ambivalent portrayals in contemporary film. Cambridge connections will be highlighted throughout the course, via writers who attended the university or visited it, and the use of nearby estates as filming locations for recent film and television.

Each class will begin with a brief talk on the session’s topic, offering historical context and key concepts. The talk will be followed by discussion of excerpts from the texts, focusing on close analysis of their language or images, themes, and historical significance. The passages for discussion will be supplied, but students are encouraged to delve into the complete works; there will be no expectation that anyone has already read widely in any of these areas of literary history.

Outline:

1.	Samuel Richardson, Pamela ; and Henry Fielding, Shamela	Housing the Marriage Plot
2.	Jane Austen, Persuasion ; and William Makepeace Thackeray, The History of Henry Esmond	Character and Its Properties
3.	E. M. Forster, Howard’s End ; and Virginia Woolf, Orlando	Modernism’s Inheritances
4.	Kazuo Ishiguro, Remains of the Day ; Atonement (dir. Joe Wright)	Plots of Memory
5.	Downton Abbey , Grantchester	Nostalgic Halls

Nathaniel Zetter is an Academic Associate at Pembroke College, University of Cambridge, where he teaches modern and contemporary literature, critical theory, and visual culture. Before joining Pembroke, he completed his PhD in English at Cambridge and acted as a Teaching Associate in English at Queens’ and Selwyn. Nathaniel’s research focuses on modern war literature and the intellectual history of literary criticism. His writing on these topics and others has appeared in The Washington Post, Textual Practice, Humanities, and Critical Quarterly—among other journals and books.